0.5 inches Writing an acknowledgement is the last and the best part of the dissertation writing process. It is a statement written by the author acknowledging the persons who assisted in writing the dissertation by being involved in different ways. You have the choice in your dissertation to leave out the acknowledgement, but this hardly ever happens. There has to be a way for you to thank the persons who helped you, made sacrifices in terms of time and effort and supported you to complete your dissertation successfully.

After all it is not the proper etiquette as not to do so. Acknowledgments do not need to comply with any fixed format or structure. It should be written in simple and in a personal tone. But sometimes, simpler matters turn out to be more difficult than one assumes.
